MRS. JENKS' STORY.
As Told to the Potter Committee To-day.

National Associated Press to the Star.
WASHINGTON, June 24.—The Potter Committee met at 11 o'clock this morning.

Mr. Potter, who had returned from New York, whither he had gone on a visit to his family prior to leaving for Louisiana, presided.

Shortly after Mrs. Jenks walked in with slowly measured step, and bowing in a semi-theatrical manner to the members of the Committee, took her chair.

Mr. Springer was the first who took a hand in eliciting some information from her, and in reply to his question she stated that she did not know anything about the so-called Sherman letter.

Some one else might have known about it. She is the only one now that knows. She dictated it to some one, but refuses to tell who. To the language of the letter is her original production, and the person who wrote it acted as her amanuensis extraordinary.

A good many persons were present in the room at the time; she refuses to name any one, excepting her amanuensis extraordinary, who she did not remember who was there. Did not hear the name at the time of any one present in the room; they were all strangers to her. She has given to oblivion the name of the person to whom she dictated the letter.

"Don't you know you wrote the letter yourself?"

"Why do you want to know?"

"I will not say you did not write it?"

Witness said the letter was written on medium sized letter paper; might have been written partially on two pages of the sheet, as nearly as she can recollect it was written on one page. The envelope used was a plain white envelope, larger than usual, letter size, and yet not as large as the official size, and refuses to tell who handed it over to her. It has passed into the hands of shadows; it is not exact; not comfortable; does not remember speaking to any one in the room. The envelope was addressed to D. A. Weber and Jas. E. Anderson.

Mr. Springer requested Mrs. Jenks to write upon a sheet of paper a copy of the so-called Sherman letter. She at first declared her willingness to do so, but subsequently declined, saying she could see no necessity for it. Mrs. Jenks stated that when Weber handed her the letter addressed to Sherman her first impulse was to deliver it, but she unconsciously opened it and read it. She was at the time absorbed in contemplating mentally the affairs of the Nation, and unconsciously bit off the end of the envelope and took out the letter to see if it was necessary to deliver it. When she discovered its contents her disgust overcame her and she would not permit such a letter to go to Mr. Sherman. She did not tell Mr. Sherman or any of his friends of it. It was a philanthropic act on her part.

She subsequently visited Governor Kellogg's office, and met Mr. Sherman and General Sheridan there. All that was said of any importance on that occasion was concerning the weather.

Has not a memorandum with her; they are too voluminous to bring in one. Besides, Messrs. Sherman and Sheridan, Mr. Stoughton, Gen. Garfield, and others were in Gov. Kellogg's office; does not think anything was said about the count. Her relations with Anderson and Weber on November 20th, 1876, were very friendly.

Q.—What interest then could you have had to deceive two friends of yours to render a service to a man who was a comparative stranger to you.

A.—Simply to maintain the honor of the party.

The witness stated she had been told by Weber that he (Anderson) had been assured of protection by some one, but Sherman's name was never mentioned in the matter. She acted as the self-appointed agent of the Republican party.

Mrs. Jenks desired to know of General Butler where he procured that letter from Mrs. Weber. Mr. Butler: "O, I will explain that to-morrow."

Mr. McMahon said he would like to have her correspondence with Kellogg. "Yes," said Mrs. Jenks, "for thereby hangs a tale." Said Mr. McMahon: "I should like very much to get hold of that tale."

Witness never saw Mr. Sherman write. Don't know his handwriting. Mrs. Jenks was discharged then until to-morrow.

HUNTING THE HOSTILES.
The Indians Scouting Cows and Tomahawking Horses.
National Associated Press to the Star.

MALHERBY CITY, OREGON, June 24.—The Indians are now in Harney Valley, between Stein's Mountain and Silver's River. Two men have been killed in Harney Valley. The Indians are destroying horses and cattle, and apparently have a stronghold on the side of Stein's Mountain. A white scout sent from Fort Harney was in their camp. The Indians sent him back with a message to bring lots of soldiers. He said he saw about three hundred warriors. Natchez Winnemucca, who came from the camp, reports only one hundred. G. B. Crowley reports that Natchez is sick from exertion and exposure in aiding him to escape.

Winnemucca is on his way to McDermott with seventy-five refugees. Sarah Winnemucca, her brother, his wife and Captain Wilkinson, aid-de-camp, have been sent to Harney by Gen. Howard. Fort Harney is filled with terrified refugees, men, women and children. Harney Valley is deserted. Thirty men of Company A, First Cavalry, under McDermott, scouting toward Harney Valley, are rumored to have had their horses taken by the hostiles. Gen. Howard's cavalry and infantry were expected to form a junction at some point on the Harney Road last night. Stewart's battalion of foot troops will be twenty-five miles out on that road from the Malheur Agency. Bernard is still pushing along the hostile track; he has about one hundred and forty men. Stewart and Grover concentrated will have about three hundred and eighty men.

PISTOLS FOR TWO.
Acklen Thirsts for Rosser's Gore.
National Associated Press to the Star.

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 24.—With reference to the affair between Representative Acklen, of Louisiana, and Mrs. Godfrey, sister-in-law of Hon. B. A. Willis, of New York, the Post to-day contains a lengthy article, of which the following portion embraces a fact not heretofore made public: Mr. Acklen that night and the next morning was quite placidly in attendance upon Congress.

The next day Mr. Acklen and the scandal-laden lady were seen in a carriage together, and on Thursday night when he left for home, it is asserted on the best authority that the lady, with two other persons, accompanied him in the same hack to the depot at a late hour of the night. On the other hand, Acklen's friends claim that, being repudiated to be very rich and lavish in his expenditures of money, he has been the victim of a carefully planned device, and, unfortunately, through General Rosser's intemperate zeal and garrulousness, has been put at a terrible disadvantage.

They assert, and we might, if it were necessary, give the best of means to sustain it, that Acklen was hurried to Louisiana to arrange his affairs, and as soon as he gets these his friend, who is a well known duelist, will at once notify Gen. Rosser to name some gentlemen to represent him with a view to settlement according to strict code.

Acklen admits to have seriously compromised the lady and professes his willingness to make her the only reparation in his power. That there are facts not yet brought to light, and which may never be made public, that will materially aid in settling the side of the lady in a different direction is undoubtedly true. In the first place it is not probable that a man weighing not more than one hundred and forty pounds, which is probably in excess of Acklen's weight, could successfully assail a woman of a much stronger physique and in robust health.

In the next place there can be no doubt that the two have been most amicably associated together since the Tuesday night of the occurrence. Acklen has probably arrived at New Orleans by this time and will doubtless make his statement in the papers there. He is a young man of fair abilities and attractive personal appearance. It is a mistake to say he is foolish. It would be nearer the truth to say he is always elegantly dressed.

He is not stranger to the duello, having brought down his man on the sanguinary field, and having, besides acting as principal, engaged in a number of duels as accessory. He is also reported to be a crack shot. General Rosser is also a game man, of powerful mold and undoubted staying qualities. Acklen could easily mark out two men of his own size on Rosser's rotundity.

A statement by the friends of Acklen follows this, which contradicts the recent mention of a "sensational and unvarnished character" as to his behavior to a lady, and says that "his version of the affair is entirely corroborated by the lady."

Death of Mayor Kane of Baltimore.
National Associated Press to the Star.

BALTIMORE, Md., June 24.—Mayor Kane died at 3:42 p. m. yesterday at his residence. He was unconscious since the preceding morning, his tongue being also paralyzed. He passed away easily; his wife, Miss Kelly, Gen. C. C. Egerton and nurse being by his bedside at the time. George P. Kane was born in Baltimore in 1826, of Irish parentage.

At an early age he started in business as a grain dealer, and was very successful. In 1849 he was appointed Collector of the Port of Baltimore, by President Taylor, which position he held through the administration of President Fillmore.

Subsequently he was appointed Marshal of the city, and it was mainly through his instrumentality that the celebrated riot of April 19th, 1861, when a mob attacked the Sixth Massachusetts Regiment at Camden Station, was put down and great loss of life prevented. That same year he was indicted for treason and was confined in Fort Warren, Lafayette and McHenry for a period of fourteen months in all. After his release he went South, where he remained until the close of the war, and returned to this city in 1868. In 1873 he was elected Sheriff, and in 1877 Mayor, which position he held at the time of his death.

How on the Haging Canal.
National Associated Press to the Star.

ALBANY, N. Y., June 24.—Dispatches from Lockport received here report that the discharged lock-tenders on the canal at Lockport had seized the locks and refused to allow any one to take their places and prevent boats from passing through.

The Superintendent of Public Works has left for the scene of trouble. Advice received last night reported that order has been so far restored by the local authorities that navigation had been resumed.

The Superintendent says the question raised was merely whether he should carry out the purpose of reform on the canals or not. He intended to discharge all men who accepted scale money on the canals, or perquisites from captains for passing their boats through in a hurry, and would keep on discharging them until he succeeded in putting honest men in their places. Considerable excitement is visible here among canal men, who have heard probably exaggerated rumors of the extent of the strike.

A Society Event.
National Associated Press to the Star.

CLEVELAND, O., June 24.—The marriage of Senator B. K. Bruce, colored, of Mississippi, to Miss Josephine R. Wilson, of this city, will take place to-night at the residence of the bride's father, Dr. Wilson. After the wedding the couple will leave for New York, where they will take passage for Europe. They expect to remain on the Continent for several months.

Geistlich again Drowned.
National Associated Press to the Star.

PHILADELPHIA, June 24.—Saturday night a man was seen to act very strangely on one of the Shamokin-street Ferry-boats in a trip across the Delaware. A gentleman called the attention of another to the remarkable resemblance of the man to Geistlich, the murderer of his family in this city, and they were on the point of approaching him, when he suddenly jumped over the railing into the river and was drowned. The harbor police were dragging the river all day yesterday, but the body has not yet been recovered.

The Tale of a Bottle.
Special to the Star.

BISMARCK, DAK., June 24.—This note was taken from a bottle picked up in the Missouri River, below this place a few days since, and is believed to be genuine: "Headwaters of the Yellowstone River. The Indians have got me surrounded. I have killed nineteen or twenty of them, but there are too many for me. Good-by. My home is Maine, L. L. Kensington, Augusta, Me. Oh God! they have hit me in the—"

There the note stopped.

Alex. H. Stephens.
National Associated Press to the Star.

AUGUSTA, GA., June 24.—Hon. A. H. Stephens arrived Saturday night, and was received by a large crowd at the depot and hailed with a salute of thirteen guns. He briefly addressed his friends from the platform of the car, and thanked them for the ovation. He said: Before I leave this city I will answer face to face all the assaults that have been made upon me.
